There may be many places to party in the Greek islands, but few destinations can lay claim to this much glitz and glamour – especially when you can rest your heads at the best hotels in Mykonos.

The star-frequented Cycladic island (check out our list of the best hotels in Santorini if you're after the more romantic isle) has swapped sleepy fishing villages for jet-set-friendly parties, soundtracked by international DJs dropping in. There are beach clubs for the yacht crowd, buzzy bars and nightlife, and global restaurant brands that every self-respecting A-list-attracting destination simply has to have (we're looking at you, Zuma).

Along with golden beaches and its cobblestoned main town, the island's other landmarks are whitewashed sugar-cube structures and its iconic 16th-century windmills. See the sea-edge houses in the artist-favoured Little Venice area, or sail over to uninhabited Delos for an archaeological education.

Relatively new arrivals to the island include super-cool Cali and Kalesma, the latter of which translates as 'inviting' in Greek so we have high hopes. Cali is home to what must be the best (and likely longest) pool on the island – it's also on a much quieter corner of the island, over in Kalafatis Beach, making it the perfect place to recuperate if you've partied a little too hard.

Bill & Coo is worth a trip just to see its LED-lit pool – and its Valmont spa and Beefbar outpost aren't bad either.

The Wild by Interni

On a cliffside above the Aegean, the Wild by Interni is named after the fearless fishermen nicknamed 'the Wild Ones' who once stewarded the cove below. Mykonos may be a starry island now, but the hotel aims to recreate a simpler side of its past, when it was mostly just sleepy fishing villages.

There are 40 rooms, suites and villas overlooking the water, with some that have two bedrooms, private plunge pools and even their own dining room if you want to get fancy. The decor includes handcrafted lamps and floors, woven baskets and plenty of natural materials. Unsurprisingly, slow food is the order of the day at the restaurant, which uses both local produce and traditional techniques.
